Building professionalism in project management.™

Rescue My Project™ – RMP501
August 18-19, 2010 14 PDUs
8:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.

Prerequisites: Base understanding of project management principles is required, either through completion of an introductory project management course, or through experience and knowledge of the PMBOK® Guide.

Our interactive, instructor led course is designed to give project managers the knowledge and tools necessary to effectively assess and either recover or terminate a troubled project. Through instruction, discussions of real experiences and hands on exercises that have been carefully designed to take course participants through the entire project rescue process, project managers will gain insight into why projects fail and recognizing symptoms of troubled projects. Participants will learn how to effectively and efficiently plan and execute the entire project rescue process, including assessment, project decision, and recovery or termination.

Any project at any organization with any team can fail. However, projects never go from being well managed, on-budget and on-schedule to outright failure overnight. There is always a transition period during which time the project is “troubled”. It is during this time that a window of opportunity exists in which the project can potentially be rescued, and is likely the last chance to save the project. Our course will give project managers the knowledge and tools needed to quickly and accurately assess the current status and root causes of problems, decide the most appropriate course of action and plan and execute that decision.
